

In this book I use the predator as a metaphor to represent predatory and abusive behavior. A predator is an individual who seduces and later abuses the well being of his victim. He seeks to pleasure himself as he totally disregards the needs and desires of his prey. He leaves his victim confused and exhausted, while he himself grows stronger and satisfied. It is the desire of the predator to achieve full and absolute control over his prey as his survival depends on the complete submission and emotional destruction of his victim. This emotional and psychological abuse is usually denied, oversteering, and frequently perceived as not important, yet it is extremely damaging for the human mind. It is my aim to increase awareness of the dangers and deceitful ways of this abusive behavior, and to offer effective and practical tools to help those who might be, or have been, victimized by this oppressor whether in their personal relationship, business, or professional lives. I wish to help them identify and recognize his seductive ways, as well as to give them the tools to learn how to successfully deal and cope with his harmful and deceitful nature. In addition, and equally important, is to help identify the common traits of victims - the beliefs and characteristics that makes them become an easy prey for the predator, and how to change and empower them in overcoming these traits. In business and in my professional experience as a psychotherapist, I have found that the power of the predator is often mystified and misunderstood by the victim and the predator himself. You will find that this oppressor has a false identity and a root core belief that once understood, unlocks a powerful force within the prey not only to open the gate and gracefully defeat this opponent, but to lead the way.
